I supervise general psychotherapists using a relational model, and I have further expertise in family therapy, professional ethics, and organizational consultation. Whenever possible, I have a no-fee session with prospective supervisees to as to ensure that my style, my world view, and my areas of expertise are a good fit.

Most recently, I have been doing supervision and consultation work, teaching at University of British Columbia and Adler University in their Counselling Psychology programs, and doing regular clinical practice through Jericho Counselling in Vancouver. From 2000 to 2010 I was the director of the Master of Counselling Program at City University of Seattle. Before that I taught psychology, supervised counselling teams, and did community agency work in East Vancouver.

My Ph.D. is in clinical and counselling psychology (Walden, 2008), with an M.A. (UBC, 1993) specializing in family therapy, and a B.A. (UBC, 1978) in psychology.
