My name is Joel Kroeker and I'm a clinical supervisor, Jungian psychoanalyst and music-centred psychotherapist based in the Greater Victoria BC area.

I tend toward a relational model of psychodynamic supervision which invites all of the various perceptions present, including the supervisee's reverie, somatic experience and the interpersonal transference relationships that these occur within.

Since originally becoming authorized as a clinical supervisor in 2012, I've worked with various types of psychotherapists and practitioners to support them in developing their clinical skills, increase their capacity to appropriately address ethical dilemmas, effectively utilize the transference relationship toward therapeutic aims, work with egoic defenses in both patient and therapist, utilize therapeutic resources beyond the egoic operating system, help them formulate and carry out effective treatment goals, navigate perceived power imbalances and approach issues related to cultural diversity and perceived difference.

I've worked with practicum students, individuals and have led supervision groups.

My recent book, entitled "Jungian Music Psychotherapy: When Psyche Sings (Routledge, 2019)," offers some clinical vignettes on how I approach the psychoanalytic dyad and the myriad variations and forms of this psychodynamic relational container.
