I believe clinical supervision is integral to safe, ethical practice. I am originally from the UK where clinical supervision is mandatory as part of your ongoing accreditation process. I am a big advocate for clinical supervision and its importance in our field.

I have been providing clinical supervision and consultation since 2022. I am currently the counselling supervisor at the Central Okanagan Elizabeth Fry Society where we support survivors of sexual and intimate partner violence. I supervise both the counselling team and the counselling practicum students.

In my private practice, I specialize in relationship/couples and sex therapy, gender-affirming care and sexual health support. I am available for individual clinical supervision and consultation for any health workers looking to gain direction and insight into how they can better understand, support, and treat their clients with these issues.

My supervisory style is collaborative, trauma-informed, and anti-oppressive.
