My primary therapeutic orientation is psychoanalytic and relational. I am creative, evolving, resourceful and a lifelong learner which all show up in my role as supervisor. My original training was in child and adolescent development. I work with individuals of all ages and couples and have had a successful full-time private practice for nearly three decades. I am eager to share my experience and wisdom with seasoned peers and with those just entering the field. I provide a safe place for helpers to express with complete candor what they are experiencing in the clinical space. Many therapists are attracted to the field because they have big hearts, are self-critical and easily internalize negative evaluations by others, all things I am very attuned to. I'm interested in helping therapists hone their skills and know themselves better, all in the service of best practice outcomes for the clients/patients.
