I have been an art therapist for almost 30 years and have also added expressive art therapy to my practice in the last 10 years. As someone who first began working in agency settings with a feminist mandate, social action has always been interwoven in my practice as well as how the arts offer an opportunity to ask questions and find surprises. I have done both group and individual supervision, with students in various programs (art therapy and expressive arts) - this includes supervision for individuals in private practice, in agencies (i.e., mental health, not-for-profit), and school environments. Areas include trauma-informed approaches, sensorimotor and other embodied approaches to the expressive arts as well as grief and loss.
